Gotcha!

A photographer for a local newspaper made news himself this Thursday when he was arrested for criminal trespassing and disorderly conduct with persistence. Marc A. Bowersox, 25, 241 S. Church St., allegedly entered the Cooper Tire and Rubber Company, 1175 N. Main St. in response to a reported fire on the roof. According to the Bowling Green Police Chief Galen Ash, the fire was already out by the time Bowersox arrived at the building.

Bowersox allegedly entered the building past a sign which prohibited entry by unauthorized personnel. After a security guard escorted him out, he reportedly ran around the building and reentered from the front. He was then confronted by more security officers and a police officer.

According to the police report, Bowersox said he would "see that The Sentinel never covered another groundbreaking or any other newsworthy event at Cooper in the city."

After several minutes of discussion, Bowersox reportedly began using profanity repeatedly.

Police reported he said, "Go ahead, arrest me." The officers arrested him.

Bowersox will be arraigned in Bowling Green Municipal Court Wednesday at 10 a.m.

Attempted rape:

Police said a woman was reportedly walking home on Clough Street at about 2:30 a.m. Thursday when a man forced her into an alley and attempted to rape her.

The man allegedly told the woman he had a gun and would shoot her if she was not quiet.

According to the police report, the man told the woman, "he needed and desired someone to love and didn't have anyone."

The woman reportedly convinced the man to come to her apartment. She then led the man to a friend's apartment building. After arriving at the building, the man reportedly refused to go inside and ran away.

The man is described as being 6 feet tall, between 160 and 170 lbs., and 28 to 30 years old. He reportedly has light brown hair, brown eyes, a small light mustache and light facial hair. He was wearing a navy-blue sweat jacket, blue jeans and a blue bandana over his face.

Yeltsin rejects compromise

The Associate Press

MOSCOW -- President Boris Yeltsin ruled out any compromise Monday with hard-line lawmakers who remained barricaded in parliament with dwindling support and no electricity, hot water or telephones.

Yeltsin's tough stand and constant pressure from hundreds of flak-jacketed riot police appeared to be eroding the will of his opponents, who were weakened by defections and miserable conditions inside the Russian White House, or parliament building.

Speaking confidently on national TV, Yeltsin rejected proposals for simultaneous presidential and parliamentary elections as a way to end the stand-off that began when he dissolved parliament last week.

He insisted on sticking to his plan for a parliamentary election in December, with presidential balloting six months later. He said compromise was "doubly dangerous" and could lead to conflict.

"No. I am not making such compromises with any organizations any more. I am categorically against it," Yeltsin said.

The lawmakers appealed to Russia's armed forces to revolt and oust Yeltsin, but the army stood firmly with the president. The crowd of anti-Yeltsin demonstrators manning the barricades outside parliament dwindled early Monday to about 200 people, but grew to about 2,000 by day's end.

Police kept a tight cordon around the demonstrators, first restricting and then easing access to the parliament's grounds. The police pressure took its toll on the jittery lawmakers.

Although Yeltsin repeatedly has said the building would not be stormed, Parliament Speaker Ruslan Khasbulatov claimed the building's defenders had prevented an attack early Monday.

"It is possible that another attempt will be made tonight," he told the lawmakers.

Some legislators bolted the hard-line cause and accepted job offers from Yeltsin.

Seventy-six lawmakers accepted transfers to positions in the Yeltsin administration, and 114 more were prepared to negotiate their political futures, said Vyacheslav Volkov, Yeltsin's deputy chief of staff.

Former KGB chief Viktor Barannikov denied reports that he would switch sides and leave the parliament, which has named him security minister in its shadow government.

Guards inside the building piled up chairs and tables in the corridors after rumors of an imminent government attack swept the building.

Lawmakers claimed to have received telegrams of support from some army and navy units.

A hard-line demonstrator vents his anger at Russian riot police who blocked off the entrance to the parliament building, still occupied by anti-Yeltsin forces in Moscow Monday. Several hundred hard-liners had tried to join their fellow demonstrators in the Russian White House.

Pandy Aragon at peace Toledo rocked by wave of violence

Former BG resident fought rare cancer to the end

by Ginger Phillips
human diversity reporter

After months of enduring the pain of cancer, Pandora Aragon is finally at peace. Pandy, a former Bowling Green resident, died Saturday in Bethesda, Md.

Two weeks ago The News featured Pandy and her husband Pepe as they coped with Pandy's rare form of cancer, which was diagnosed last December.

Pepe, a former University soccer player, and Pandy were married in August to fulfill one of Pandy's dreams after doctors determined her cancer had spread.

Since that time, Pandy had been recuperating from the wedding and, along with Pepe, was determined to fight the illness as best she could.

Last week, newlyweds Pepe and Pandora returned to the National Health Institute in Bethesda, Md. hoping a new experimental drug might stop the growth of Pandy's tumor. However, Pepe's mother, Joan Aragon, said that after one test on Thursday morning Pandy started to become unresponsive.

"They took her to the clinic and her vitals weren't good," Joan said. "She came to a few times on Thursday and Friday and just kind of slipped further and further into sleep."

Joan said the tumor in Pandy's lung had grown, causing the lining of her lung to be pushed closer together.

"The tumor had consumed her breathing capacity," Joan said. "She really seemed to be fighting for her breath."

At about 11 a.m. Saturday, a nurse who had seen Pepe and Pandy on "A Current Affair" had a talk with Pepe. Joan said the nurse told Pepe "[Pandy's] fighting so hard because many [in her condition] don't want to lose their loved ones."

Joan said that after reassurance from the nurse, Pepe told Pandy, "It's OK to let go Pandy. I'll be all right. I don't want you to suffer."

After about 45 minutes, Pandy slipped away, Joan said. Joan said she, Pepe, Pepe's father and Pepe's four sisters were all there for Pandy when she died.

TOLEDO -- Gunfire has become a familiar sound in some neighborhoods and police are trying to deal with a recent wave of violence that has terrorized inner-city residents, officials said Monday.

"Not a night goes by that we don't have some type of shooting," police detective Daniel Navarre said.

Four people were killed in separate crimes over a three-day period last week. During the same period, eight people were injured in 10 separate drive-by shootings.

Residents in the city's predominantly black neighborhood where the drive-by shootings and murders took place said they are scared.

"People can't walk outside because they're afraid they might get killed. You can't live like that," said Jerry Hall, who lives in the Oakwood section.

The violent week began last Monday when Luther Bibbs, 74, was found stabbed to death in his garage. Police suspect he was a robbery victim.

Kenneth Brown, 38, died last Tuesday in St. Vincent Medical Center about an hour after being shot in the face. His girlfriend was

Toast for coach, roast for critics

Three toasts are in order for Falcon football coach Gary Blackney and his handling of the nine football players who were suspended.

The actions of these players were hurtful to the team and community, but Blackney handled the situation with timeliness and class.

By suspending the players, the coach sent a message to the players -- and the community for that matter -- that he will not tolerate players who break training rules.

The coach was very cooperative Friday during his press conference at the team's hotel in Baltimore and answered questions as fully and honestly as he could. He was even able to laugh and joke with the media a bit.

Earlier this year, South Carolina sophomore quarterback Steve Tanneyhill also broke training rules -- for underage consumption of alcohol. A police report was filed in regard to this incident.

However, the coach chose to overlook the incident and Tanneyhill was not suspended. Blackney's actions prove that this is not the kind of program he wants to run.

"When one of my players does something wrong I try to think how I would handle the situation if one of my own children were involved," Blackney said.

After an in-house investigation early last week, the coach decided to suspend the players for one game.

Blackney said he had planned to wait until Friday afternoon to release a statement explaining the situation and announcing the reasons for the disciplinary actions taken.

However, as often happens when the release of stories are delayed, a local media source will catch wind of the situation. This time, The BG News found themselves with the exclusive, before the scheduled news conference.

Which brings us to three roasts for those select one or two individuals who criticized The News for their coverage of the situation. These people showed an apparent ignorance of the true journalism spirit of presenting as clear and as accurate a story as possible.

By Thursday evening, The News had enough of a story to go to print with.

In gathering and re-checking facts, The Blade was called in order to see what information their football writer might offer. He had no idea of the situation, so part of the exclusiveness was lost. However, there was no intention to smear the story all over. It would have come out the next day anyway.

By specifically mentioning in Monday's edition what went on to warrant the suspensions, the situation can rest and also an end will be put to wild speculation which accompanies stories when only half the facts are known.

The talk of being drug-related aside, the key to the story was the suspension of nine players from the two-time defending league champions. This is big news anywhere. It doesn't matter whether they have broken team rules (internal) or city or state ordinances (external).

Welcome to life baby-busters

Seeing that everyone under the sun has written something about the now infamous 'Generation X', it is only fitting that I follow suit.

Now, before you skip ahead to the next page thinking "enough with the Generation X stuff already," read on; I think you'll find my spin quite different from the rest.

Before we begin, I must first choose from the hundred or so nicknames that have been thought up to define the 44.2 million young men and women that were born between 1965 and 1976. Those most used include "Generation X," the "twenty-somethings," "grunge kids," "after-boomers" and "baby-busters." I will use the latter, simply because I enjoy the negative reference to "baby-boomers," a term I despise.

Every generation, since the inception of our great country, has had within it an event so monumental, it labeled them for life. We of the baby-buster set, however, have yet to find our defining moment. Desert Storm came close, but we could hardly go down in history being known as the "Desert Stormers" now could we?

The subject of our seeming lack of definition has been the news media quite often lately. The USA TODAY recently interviewed an author of one of the latest offerings, Neil Howe, co-author of 13th GEN.

The interview revealed some things that I believe show just how out of touch Mr. Howe, and many other members of the baby-busters are, when it comes to life, and how to live it.

weekly columnist

Here is a sampling of some of the senseless dung this guy has to offer: "No rational person would invest loyalty in a large corporation today."

Excuse me? If Mr. Howe wasn't so hung up on being pee'd off at the world maybe he would realize that evil "big business" offers employees benefits that even Bill Clinton would be envious of. Thirty days paid vacation, full medical coverage, tuition assistance, day-care. Being loyal to a big company has many advantages.

Busters "do not see work as an expression of their inner souls" but "they do have a work ethic."

Since when was work supposed to be an expression of inner soul? What college did this guy go to anyway? If they taught you that work is supposed to be some mushy display of your inner wealth, you had best ask for your money back. And as far as having a work ethic goes, I have met very few people my age that even understand what work is. Those of you that think going to class and working on a term paper until midnight is hard work know who you are.

"They do not expect a lot from themselves...and they have no expectations that the government or the public as a whole will do them many favors."

Who says that the government owes you anything anyway? It is precisely this attitude that the government "owes me, because I'm entitled" that got us into the economic mess we are in today. What ever happened to getting a job, working, saving, and doing whatever it takes to get ahead? The attitude that you should get something "just because" lends little to the assumption that this group has a work ethic, or that they even understand the concept of what working for a living is.

People like Mr. Howe will stand firm on the assumption that the odds are stacked against us. I, of course, disagree.

While the odds are stacked against some, others will have an easy time making it in the world.

Recent numbers indicate that 35 percent of recent college grads took non-degree jobs, up 15 percent from five years ago. This proves my theory that generic, do-nothing degrees aren't worth the paper they are written on. Grads with useful degrees will have little difficulty finding work, and may even find themselves in a position to choose who they will work for.

Between 1988 and 1992, the number of graduating seniors grew 11 times faster than the number of full-time, non-farm jobs. This means one of two things; either too many people are going to college, or we should all milk cows for a living. This trend will continue as estimates show that there will be 200,000 fewer jobs than graduates every year for at least the next decade.

The Wall Street Journal recently interviewed a member of the busters as she sat, naked, in a co-ed hot tub, rattling on about how awful life for a college grad is.

Further reading revealed that she ran up $5,000 in debt on two credit cards buying nice clothes, trips to Mexico, and gifts for her friends, all without having a job to pay for it all. One of my favorite columnists, Phyllis Schlafly, summed it up well when she commented "If you were an employer, would you hire a young woman with that kind of attitude toward life?" I know I wouldn't.

If baby-busters, like us, are going to make it into the next century a few things are going to have to change.

Quit whining about how bad the job market is and try looking for a job.

I wish they would all shut up; I, for one, am sick of hearing about people who have to work at a quickie mart to pay the bills.

Welcome to life, pal.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Reverse racism is merely a myth

The BG News:

I am writing in response to the letter that Mr. Walters wrote. Mr. Walters, I would like to clear up some issues that you are clearly mistaken about. The problems you have with Ginger Phillip's article are due to your confusion and lack of knowledge about racism.

Reverse racism is merely a myth and it cannot happen the way our society is today. If you agree with the definition "racism is the use of political, economical, and social power to discriminate against a group of people based on their racial or ethnic background" (as you claim you do) it should be easy for you to understand that African Americans (politically correct) or people of color, simply cannot be racist in our society. Notice that I used the term racist and not prejudice or discrimination.

If anyone needs to get it straight it's you and people like yourself. Racism is a group issue as well as an individual one. If racism were an individual problem would we need groups and organizations like the Racism Reduction Center, the Black Student Union and the Latino Student Union, need I continue? Racism is not an imagined concept or problem, nor should it be treated as such.

Here's where my problem comes in. You claim that you "REFUSE" to compensate the black community for their losses." Did the black community ask you or anyone for anything?

I know I can only speak for myself, as a member of the black community, I don't want anything from anyone except equal opportunities and the respect that I deserve as another human being.

Believe it or not, sometimes I can't even get that. I believe it is people who are confused and uneducated about the issue, and pretend it doesn't exist on a structural level who perpetuate it.

Finally, the work of Lincoln, Kennedy and the many people involved in the Civil Rights Movement couldn't even make a down payment on the debts of the past.

I have one question that many refuse to answer. "Who will repay the debts of today?"

DeKatch is only choice

The BG News:

When it comes to picking the At-Large Council candidate who will serve in the best interest of student residents and permanent residents alike, there is one choice -- Scott DeKatch.

Scott is not a professional politician or a party politician, but a concerned, independent citizen. This is why he was one of the first members of the local media to publicly endorse Jim Tinker's 1991 mayoral campaign, and why he so openly and honestly criticized corruption and partisanship during his years as a local journalist.

He was in Columbus to protest cuts to higher education funding in Ohio. He was critical of the city's handling of the 1990 East Merry incident, as well as earlier indiscretions.

It was DeKatch, along with First Ward candidate Sam Melendez, who first criticized the city's neglect of its fire department.

His refusal to accept special interest campaign contributions is proof positive of his commitment to those who elect him.

University groups unite to increase voter registration

by Larissa Hritsko
student government reporter

A week-long voting drive by four student organizations kicked off Monday in an effort to reach the highest number ever of students voting in city elections.

College Democrats, College Republicans, Undergraduate Student Government and Take a Stand announced at a press conference that they joined forces in hopes to increase voter participation in the local November election.

"College Democrats and College Republicans participating together in voter registration is reminiscent of the Middle East peace conference and is quite an accomplishment," said Michael Cook, co-chairman of Take a Stand, an organization devoted to local, state, national and international concerns.

The main goal of the unified voter registration is to have the highest student voter turnout this year, Cook said.

"In 1991 only 25 percent of the students voted. If 1991 was the worst voter turnout, 1993 will be the best," Cook said. "This is not idealistic, but I believe realistic and possible."

The week-long registration drive is to end apathy about voting and start action, according to Matt Fair, president of College Democrats.

"Students should become more involved, not just thinking about voting or registering, but actually voting," Fair said.

Although more students vote in presidential elections, they should not forget to vote in local elections, said Jared Poff, president of College Republicans.

"[Students] should not forget how important [local elections] are since [they] live here and local politicians are more accessible than the President," Poff said.

Members of the organizations will be registering students all week in front of the Education Building.

Students can register to vote, make arrangements for absentee ballots or change their addresses, said Kelli Gibson, USG cabinet director of national, state and community affairs.

Home destroyed in apartment fire

by Dorian Halkovich
staff reporter

A fire destroyed a Seventh Street apartment Friday afternoon, causing smoke damage throughout the apartment building and leaving a family without a home.

John Burgin, who lived in the apartment, said the fire began after his daughter turned on the stove, but fire officials are not sure how the fire started.

Burgin said his girlfriend notified the fire department, grabbed her two small children and vacated the apartment.

Residents of the Westwood complex, 818 Seventh St., evacuated the smoke-filled building as the fire engines arrived at the building.

The fire was extinguished within half an hour, but the smoke and flames damaged furniture, carpeting, food and coated the walls with soot.

Burgin said many of the family's belongings were destroyed and they are temporarily homeless.

"It caused quite a bit of damage to the apartment and potential smoke damage to others," said Joe Burns, Bowling Green Fire Chief.

Burgin said no fire extinguishers were in the building and said his girlfriend was not able to put out the fire.

"If there would have been fire extinguishers, she would've been able to put it out," he said. "The fire never would have gotten as far as it did."

Fire extinguishers are required by law to be supplied in apartment buildings if the cabinets for them are present, according to Fire Division Captain Jack Ninke.

Ninke said he informed Newlove Rental, the owner of the building, of the requirement. He said extinguishers are scheduled to be installed in the near future.

"We've advocated that individual residents purchase their own fire extinguishers as a back-up safety feature," Burns said.

Tchaikowsky's life discussed

by Leah Barnum
environment reporter

The life of Tchiakowsky was discussed in terms of his personal, cultural and socio-economic relationships to Russia in a lecture Sunday, as part of the "Tchiakowsky and the Russians" series this semester.

University history professor Don Rowney presented his lecture "Tchaikowsky's Russia at the Dawn of the Revolution" addressing historical elements of Tchaikowsky's life as well as relating it to the current conditions in Russia today.

The presentation had special impact on the audience of about 90 because of the recent actions of Boris Yeltsin in Russia.

Terri Sharp, director of news services, said Rowney provided a historical perspective on what is happening in Russia today.

charged with the murder.

The body of Tamara Williams, 32, was found Tuesday night in the street. Police said she had gotten into a car with someone about 30 minutes before her body was found.

On Wednesday, 17-year-old Phil Lane was shot to death inside a house. Police do not have a motive or a suspect.

"Everyone wants to know what's been done and what is going to be done," said Ron Jackson, executive director of the Toledo Board of Community Relations, an organization that promotes racial harmony.

"While this tribute to Tchiakowsky could have happened [anytime], it takes on special meaning against the backdrop of our changing world and the current struggle for democracy in the former Soviet Union," said Eloise Clark, vice president for academic affairs.

The lecture detailed Tchiakowsky's life with respect to his environment in Russia.

The Russian composer lived a life of personal, socio-economic and political conflict, Rowney said.

"Tchiakowsky was a personality whose vision of the rest of the world was in many respects eccentric, distorted, and very narrow," Rowney said. "It therefore produces an impression which is a surprise and difficult to confront."

Personally, Tchiakowsky had to deal with his homosexuality, which led him to marry a woman to try to "reform" himself. He left the woman after only three months, Rowney said.

He also had to decide whether to follow the socio-economic path which was laid out for him -- one in which he was expected to work for the government as his father did.

Although Tchiakowsky, one of the foremost Russian composers, was recognized for his musical talent at a young age, he did not see music as a career option until he was in his late twenties, Rowney said.

More conflict occurred for Tchiakowsky because the romanticism and emotionalism of his views fit poorly with the traditions and concepts of Russian society -- the Russian Orthodox church, the structured class system and the conservative economic system which controlled Russia, Rowney said.

"The worlds of Tchiakowsky finally combined to form a cultural heritage that lasts to this day and one that will last for a long time to come," Rowney said. "On the other hand, it creates contradictions between a man and the world in which he lives, a world that, like the man, was so filled with the energy of potential."

The lecture was followed by a concert featuring music by Tchaikowsky, Rachmaninoff and Prokofiev. Pianist Jerome Rose, violinist Vasile Beluska and Romanian cellist Calin Muresan were the featured musicians. The series of events, which has been organized by the different departments within the University, is in honor of the 100th anniversary of Tchiakowsky's death, according to Edieanne Biesbrock-Didham, director of marketing and promotions.

Soccer team back on right track

by Andy Dugan
sports writer

In an effort to erase the memory of its first loss of the season last week to Ohio State, the soccer team went head-to-head against the University of Cincinnati, only to restart its winning campaign with a 1-0 victory.

The Falcons fought relentlessly against the evenly-matched Cincinnati squad throughout the 90-minute game.

"Going into the game, we knew it was important to bounce back from the OSU loss and get back on the positive track," BG soccer coach Mel Mahler said. "We were really pleased with our efforts today. We had Brian Ferguson and Steve Klein switch positions and we were pleased by the new formation."

"Any time you can win, you have to be happy," he added.

Cincinnati's coach also thought the efforts of the athletes were exceptional.

"I thought it was a good game," Cincinnati head coach Bob Muro said. "Both teams played very well. It was a very even match and I think the game could've gone either way. BG had a great first half and we had a great second half."

Goalkeeper Dan Traver noted the outstanding performance of the Falcon first half.

"We went out there and kicked the crap out of them for the first 30 minutes," Traver said. "The first half was by far the best playing we've done all year. I didn't touch the ball once for 30 minutes."

Ferguson

"We played really well and it was a great win to come back from after a loss. We couldn't wait for today to overcome that loss from last week and now that we've got it, we're going to go from here."

It was not until the second half that the Falcons earned the single score they needed to win by means of a penalty shot. After BG's Ferguson was pushed by one of the Bearcats while in the box, Tom Kinney took the penalty shot and scored at 29:41.

From there, BG was able to hold off any advancement the Bearcats attempted. Cincinnati was also strong in its defense, as the Falcons were not able to score again after Ferguson's tally.

"When you play teams that are so evenly matched, it's something like a penalty kick that makes or breaks the game," Muro said. "This might not have been the greatest soccer game, but it was a great match. You couldn't have gotten any more intense."

Despite the efforts of the team, Mahler sees work that needs to be done.

"After our loss last week, we had to re-evaluate our weaknesses and work on those areas," Mahler said. "Our organization of defense was our focus at practice this week. I thought we did very well today.

"Now we need to be more consistent and put 90 solid minutes of soccer out there on the field. We have to work doubly hard on our lapses, but we're getting better each game."

Mahler noted the win will help the team focus for Wednesday's game against conference opponent Western Michigan, which will begin at 4 p.m. at WMU.

No one likes to lose, especially when you feel like you should have won.

This was the attitude of the Falcon soccer team after an upsetting loss on Wednesday to Ohio State.

Head coach Mel Mahler did not get angry with his players after the loss. Instead, Mahler gave the team some advice to help them overcome the loss and prepare themselves for the rest of the season.

"You have to remember how you feel right now," Mahler said to the Falcons immediately after their 2-1 loss to the Buckeyes. "I know that none of you like this feeling. Next time you feel tired during a game, you need to have a gut-check and step up your performance so that the outcome doesn't end up like it did today."

Mahler noted that when his players get tired, defensively the team suffers.

"We need to do a better job of staying with our marks. When our players get fatigued, our defensive marking is lacking more often than not. Nobody should give up two goals in the last 15 minutes of a game, especially with a 1-0 lead," Mahler said of the performance of the Falcons against OSU.

"This week we practiced really hard. The emphasis was when we get physically fatigued we should stay mentally tough. Our practices went very well and the players learned how to motivate themselves when they start to become tired."

The hard practices paid off as the Falcons bounced back and defeated the University of Cincinnati 1-0 last Sunday. According to Mahler, there were a few mental let-downs but overall BG played well.

"We are still inconsistent in our team defense," Mahler said. "UC did not create good scoring opportunities, but we gave them a few chances."

Despite the let-downs, the Falcons played aggressively by controlling the midfield and not allowing UC to put the ball in the net. Dan Traver posted his fourth shut-out of the season in improving his record to 6-1.

On Wednesday, BG (6-1) will travel to Kalamazoo, Mich. for their second MAC conference game to play an improved Western Michigan squad (6-2).

Next Sunday, the Falcons will host Marquette University at 2 p.m. at Mickey Cochrane Field as a part of the homecoming festivities. Admission is free and all students are encouraged to come out and watch some great soccer.

Philadelphia's John Kruk beats the ball and the tag from Atlanta's Gregg Olson to score in the first inning. However, Olson and the Braves had the last laugh as they went on to win 7-2.

MAC, Big Ten players of week

The Associated Press

TOLEDO -- Central Michigan quarterback Erik Timpf was named offensive player of the week and Toledo's Jim Gant and Western Michigan's Peter Tuffo shared the defensive players of the week in the Mid-American Conference.

Timpf, a junior from Lake Orion, Mich., started his first collegiate game at Michigan State and picked up 361 yards of total offense in a 48-34 loss. He rushed for 147 yards on 12 carries including touchdown runs of 17 and 73 yards and also completed 16 of 26 passes for 214 yards and another score.

Gant, a senior middle linebacker from Toledo, had 16 tackles including eight solos in a 28-10 victory over Ohio U. Tuffo, a junior linebacker from Rochester, N.Y., had 13 tackles including six solos and one tackle for a loss in a 17-0 win over Miami of Ohio, Western's first shutout since 1986.

CHICAGO -- Tailback Brent Moss of Wisconsin was named Big Ten Player of the Week for offense Monday.

The junior from Racine, Wis., rushed for a career-high 198 yards on 32 carries in the Badgers' 27-15 win at Indiana.

Illinois linebacker Simeon Rice, a sophomore from Chicago, was named Player of the Week for defense after nine tackles in a 13-7 loss to Oregon. Five tackles were behind the line of scrimmage, including three quarterback sacks.

Women's tennis routes ICU

by Pat Murphy
sports writer

The BG women's tennis team continued its winning ways on Friday in Chicago. BG cruised to an easy 8-1 victory over Illinois-Chicago. The only obstacle the vanquish was the weather as poor conditions canceled Saturday's match with Chicago St.

Once again Erin Bowbeer got the team off to a positive start, by winning at No. 1 singles. Bowbeer lost the first set, 3-6, but rallied to beat Janet Rausa, 6-3, 6-1 in the next two sets.

At No. 2 singles Patty Bank battled a heady player in Chrissy Stone who counteracted Bank's aggressive shot-making by conservatively returning Bank's shots in order to keep them in play.

This strategy however, proved to be ineffective as Bank powered her way to a 6-4, 3-6, 6-3 victory.

Head coach Patty Dean was very satisfied with her squad's performance over the weekend.

"I am happy with our performance, because at the top I thought UIC was stronger, but our top women played well, especially Erin Bowbeer," Dean said. "She [Bowbeer] sometimes has trouble with her focus, but once she got her focus, she kept it."

In No. 3 through No. 6 BG found the going much easier -- in the four matches not one set was lost. At No. 3 singles Kassie Hembree beat Michelle Glendenning, 6-3, 6-2. Cindy Mikolajewski defeated Bree Bennett, 6-1, 6-3, at No. 4 singles. Hembree and Mikolajewski have been the most dominant of the BG players. Hembree has won 24 games while only losing 6 and Mikolajewski is 24-4.

At No. 5 singles Karen Micus defeated Joanna Musgrave, 6-1, 6-2. Julie Weisblatt, playing in her first career match at BG beat Linda Mangan, 6-0, 6-1.

BG also had success in the doubles competition, losing just one of the three matches.

"The doubles teams are beginning to take shape," Dean said.

Up next for BG is the crucial BGSU Invitational at the Robert Keefe courts beginning at 4 p.m. on Saturday. BG hosts Akron, Eastern Michigan and Toledo.

Seattle pitcher Randy Johnson reaches back for a pitch during his last start against Oakland. The towering lefty became the newest member of the exclusive 300 strike out club, joining Vida Blue, Steve Carlton, Bob Feller, Walter Johnson, Sandy Koufax, Mickey Lolich, Sam McDowell, J.R. Richard, Nolan Ryan, Mike Scott and Rube Waddell. Oakland's Ruben Sierra was Johnson's 300th strikeout victim of the season with the score tied 2-2 in the ninth inning. The Kingdome crowd of 22,751 gave Johnson, the major league leader in strikeouts, a standing ovation. Seattle lost 3-2 in their final home game of the year.

Quarterback controversy brewing in Cleveland

The Associated Press

BEREA, Ohio -- Coach Bill Belichick's decision to bench Bernie Kosar came even quicker this week, leaving Cleveland Browns fans wondering how long it will be before Kosar falls out of favor completely.

The Browns have not scored a point in Kosar's last six quarters. The last touchdown he produced came against San Francisco in the second quarter of game two.

Vinny Testaverde came off the bench for the second straight week Sunday, replacing Kosar at halftime of the Browns' 23-10 loss at Indianapolis. A week earlier, Testaverde entered the game in the fourth quarter and rallied the Browns to a last-minute victory over the Los Angeles Raiders.

The last-minute magic wasn't there against the Colts, who intercepted Testaverde with just over two minutes left, then forced a fumble that they recovered for the clinching touchdown with 79 seconds to go.

Belichick said after the game that Kosar would remain the starter. He refused to elaborate on the situation Monday.

"I'm just going to leave it with what we talked about after the game yesterday," Belichick said. "That's really all I've got to say about the quarterback situation."

The coach seemed unconcerned about any uncertainty the quarterback switching might have created among his players.

"I can't really control what other people think," he said. "I made the decision during the game to do what I thought was best for us to win at that point. I would assume that the other players respect that decision."

Friends since they were teammates at the University of Miami, Kosar and Testaverde were both surprised by the timing of the move in Sunday's game. Kosar was lifted at halftime with the Browns trailing 6-0, largely because they had already committed 10 of their 13 penalties.

Kosar was 4-of-8 for 53 yards with no interceptions and he was sacked twice. In the second half, Testaverde was 9-of-16 for 127 yards with one touchdown, one interception and he was sacked three times.

"I told Bernie I didn't think he should have been pulled," Testaverde said. "Every time he tried to get something going, we had a penalty."

Former BG boss leads WVU to top 25

The Associated Press

CHARLESTON, W.Va. -- West Virginia coach Don Nehlen hopes that breaking into The Associated Press' Top 25 poll is only the beginning. His long-range goal: an undefeated season for his Mountaineers.

Gratified that his Mountaineers made the rankings for the first time in nearly a year on Sunday, Nehlen said he was more interested in keeping the Mountaineers' record unbeaten.

Ranked No. 25, they're 3-0 so far after Saturday's 35-3 victory over Missouri.

"We are happy to be ranked, and it's a credit to our players and program," Nehlen said Sunday. "(But) we have goals for ourselves, and we must keep striving to reach them."

The Mountaineers are in the rankings for the first time since they were No. 24 last October.

The Mountaineers face tougher opponents ahead. This week, they host Virginia Tech, which beat Maryland 55-28 last week, followed by No. 18 Louisville, Pittsburgh and No. 13 Syracuse.

Florida State, which has been No. 1 since the start of the season, remained on top of the media poll with 58 first-place votes and 1,545 points. The Seminoles had the weekend off.

The rest of the Top 10 also stayed the same, with No. 2 Alabama followed by Miami, Notre Dame, Florida, Nebraska, Ohio State, Michigan, Penn State and Oklahoma.

The Associated Press/Orlin Wagner

Kansas City Royals' George Brett waves to the crowd after hitting a game winning home run to beat the California Angels 9-8. Brett announced earlier this week he will retire at the end of the season.
